Needham High School

1865-1965

Early in the 1860's the state government decreed that Needham, along with several other towns, was failing to obey a Massachusetts law requiring "that all towns of five hundred families or more provide a master to instruct their children in history, algebra, surveying, geography, and other branches of learning." Consequently, in 1864 a committee was appointed to study the problem of establishing a high school; and in March 1865, town meeting voted upon and passed the motion to establish a high school. In May 1865, twenty-eight students began attending classes taught by Mr. Silas Bundy Rawson on the second floor of the Centre Schoolhouse, Needham's first high school.

THE EAST HIGH SCHOOL

During its hundred years Needham High School has occupied several different buildings. When the high school was first established, two schools were actually set up. Since Wellesley was still a part of Needham in 1865, the so-called West High School was established in what is now Wellesley; and the East High School was set up for the area which is still Needham. On this map the various locations of the East High School (called simply Needham High School after the Needham-Wellesley separation in 1881) are indicated.

The first high school classes were held in the Centre School (1). This school had been built at the location of the old center of town which in the early 1800's was the location of the meetinghouse and a sawmill. In 1865, however, the center of town was beginning to shift to its present location because of the railroad. Stores were being built near the railroad, and eventually churches also; and thus the rest of the high schools were located near the present center of town. Village Hall (2), later known as Parker Hall, was located on Great Plain Avenue near the railroad tracks; Oakland Hall (5), on May Street behind St. Joseph's Church; the Kimball building (2) (on the site of the old Parker Hall), where the Norfolk County Trust Co. is now; the Emery Grover School (3), next to St. Joseph's Church on Highland Avenue; the school known simply as Needham High School (4), next to the Emery Grover School; the present Needham High School (6), located on the hill above Memorial Park.

Oakland Institute, the building of the East High School in 1867-1868

Kimball School, the building of Needham High School from 1885 to 1896. This school was built on the site of Parker Hall, which burned in 1884.

Printed by permission of Norfolk County Trust Co.

The first high school building was the Centre Schoolhouse on the corner of Central Avenue and Nehoiden Street. The East High School of thirty-two pupils (average attendance twenty-eight) did not remain there very long but moved to Village Hall, sometimes known as Parker Hall, near the railroad tracks. According to a history of the school written by Lloyd Towle Bigelow in 1935, "the pupils who sat near the windows felt themselves most fortunate, for the coming and going of the trains broke up the monotony of the school day." This location was also convenient for students who came by train from Dover.

In its third year the East High School combined with Oakland Institute (previously a private preparatory school for boys) and moved to the Oakland House on the corner of Oakland Avenue and May Street. This arrangement did not last, and after two terms the school moved back to the Village Hall under Mr. W. E. Skillings. After the school moved, the Oakland house became the Appleton Temporary Home for Inebriates. It was in this year, 1868, that Needham High School had its first graduate, Miss Caroline Gay.

In 1871 the school moved to Keith's Building, formerly Mr. Fowler's store, with Mr. Putnam as teacher. This arrangement lasted less than a year.

The whole town contributed to the construction of Memorial Field and attended the ceremonial flag raising in 1921, a few years prior to building the high school on the hill. (below and left)

The school then moved to the Kimball Building (actually still Parker Hall. It burned in 1884 and was rebuilt as the Kimball School, since classes had been held in it for over ten years) with Mr. C. S. Hamilton as teacher. The many changes of location and teacher were unsettling; but despite these problems, in 1871 Needham High School had two more graduates, Miss Emma Hatch and Miss Annie Moseley, the first students to receive diplomas from the school.

The school remained at the Kimball building until 1898. During the later 1880's the school committee presented a motion that Dover students be allowed to attend Needham High School for fifty cents a week. In 1896 the size of the school had increased so that a larger school building had to be considered. Mr. John Moseley gave the school a lot of land next to St. Joseph's Church for the site of the new high school. The school was built at a cost of $33,000 and completed in 1898. This school, later named the Emery Grover after Judge Emery Grover of the school committee, was the first school building built purposely for a high school.

By 1920 the number of students exceeded two hundred. The school was becoming crowded; and when in 1922 the enrollment was three hundred and nineteen, necessitating double sessions, obviously a new building was needed.

The town meeting voted in favor of a new school, and one was built on the next lot. This school had a gymnasium, which none of the previous schools had had, as well as a lunchroom. Again, however, the number of students increased; and this school, too, became overcrowded.

Once more the town meeting voted in favor of a new school, and the present school was built on the hill above Memorial Park, which had been recently constructed by the townspeople. This school was completed in 1930. Because of increasing numbers an addition, which included a new gymnasium and cafeteria as well as classrooms, was built in 1952. Now in 1965, the school is again reaching capacity and another addition is planned.

Education in the 1860's contained few extras or "frills," and the curriculum of Needham High School was a strictly academic or useful one. Algebra, geometry, French, botany, and natural, moral, and mental philosophy were the subjects taught by Professor Silas Bundy Rawson and later by Albion Cate, an undergraduate at Harvard. Latin also was included in the curriculum, although one member of the school committee strongly disapproved of permitting girls to study Latin.

Students who wanted to attend high school had to be serious about their studies, for they had to pass an examination in order to be admitted. They had to achieve 80% on their mathematics examination and similarly high scores on their other examinations. In 1890, of thirty-five students who took the examinations, twenty-three passed the tests and were approved; four were conditionally approved; and eight failed.

When the school was combined with Oakland Hall under Jonas B. Clarke, a larger number of courses were offered; but since the high school was at Oakland Hall only two terms, no important change occurred. When the school moved back to Parker Hall, Mr. W. E. Skillings, the next teacher, continued the original rigid curriculum with, perhaps, the addition of grammar.

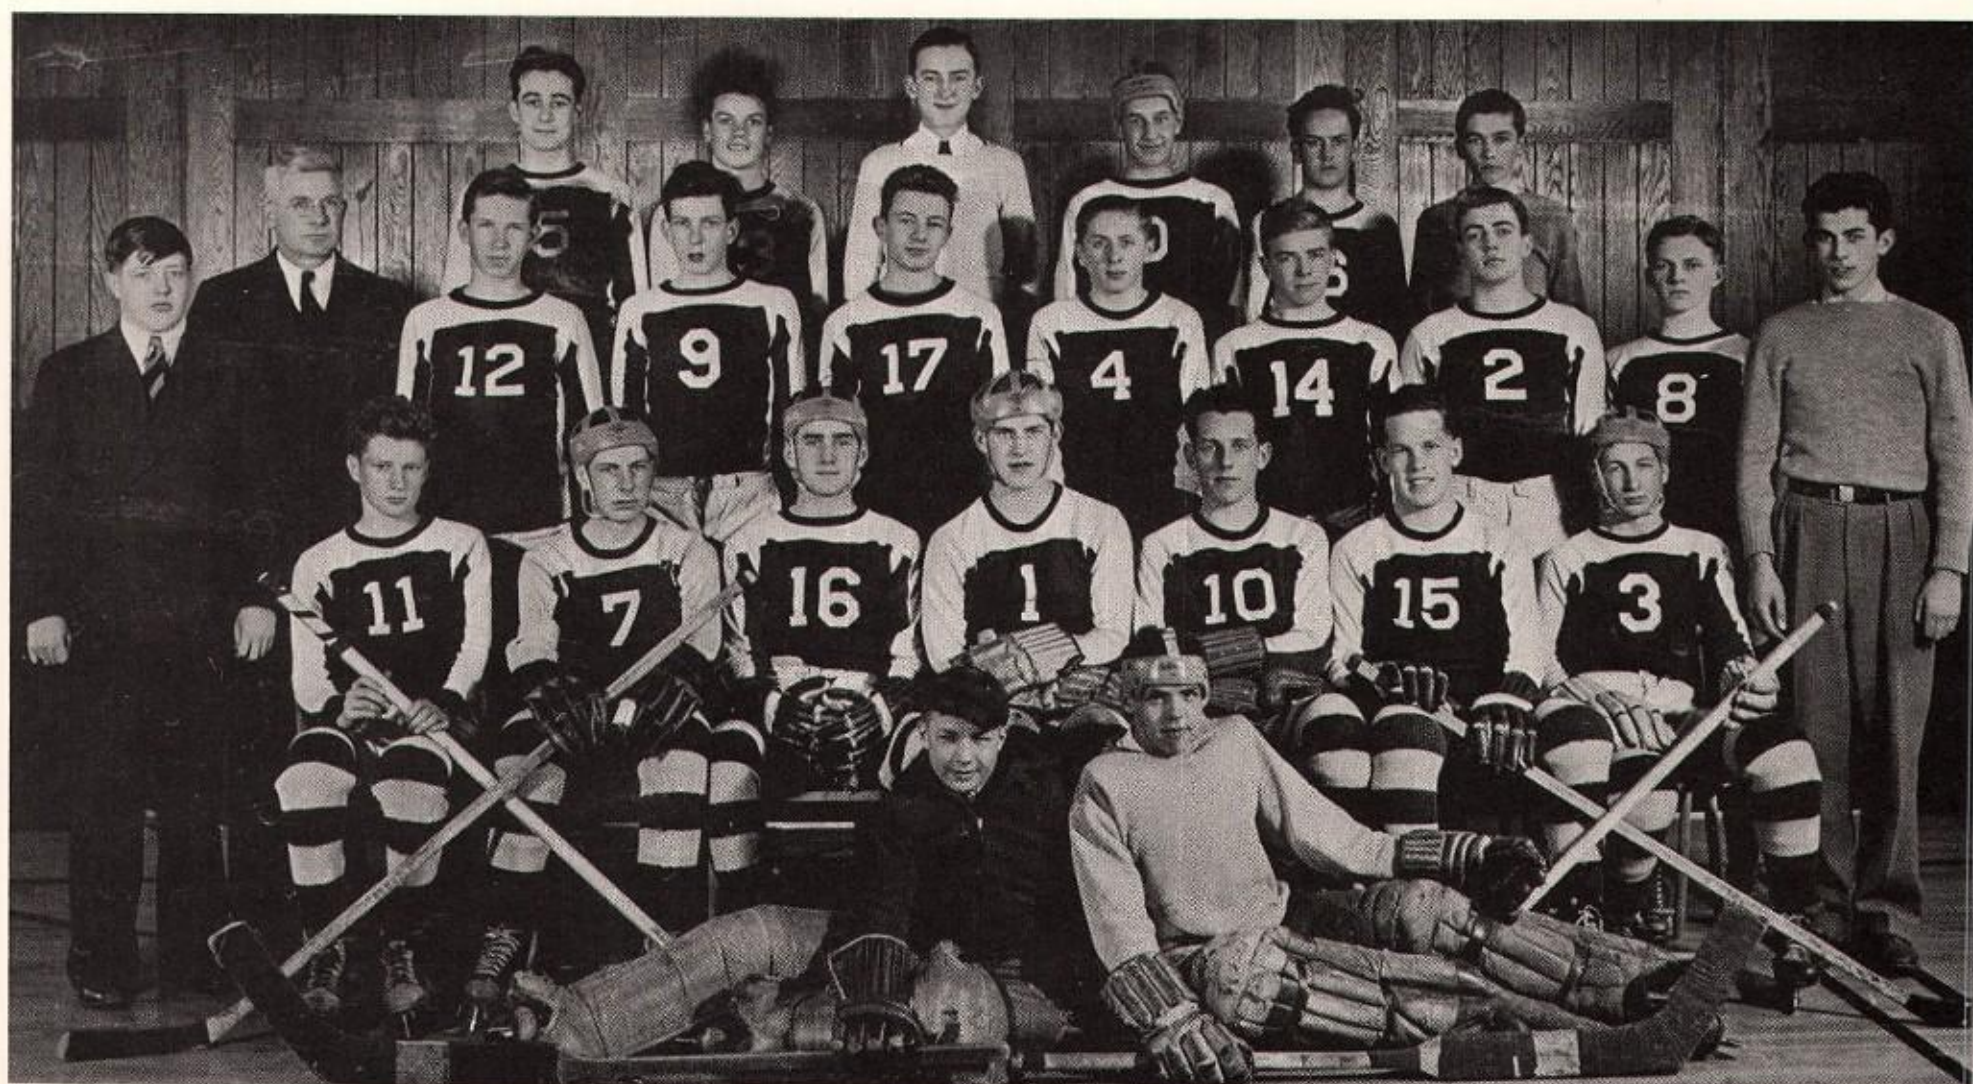

In the 1870's, however, the school committee began considering new subjects; and one member suggested the addition of music to the curriculum. They voted not to spend any money on music, but in 1877 Mr. Tilden was permitted "to give instruction in music in the schools without expense to the town." The attitude toward such subjects as music grew more liberal, and in 1887 the town authorized the buying of fifty copies of the New High School Music Reader for instruction in music.

At this time the school was occupying the Kimball Building and was having fewer changes of teachers and buildings. Greek and German were now part of the curriculum as well as music; and students could choose from three programs of study, the classical course, the business course, and the modern language course.

In 1885 the school committee suggested the study of subjects such as temperance, physiology, and hygiene; but these motions were rejected. One member voted against the addition of such new subjects because he felt that "the schools were already cumbered with too many studies and should hesitate to introduce another."

Throughout the next thirty to forty years the curriculum gradually changed and enlarged with such subjects as chemistry and mechanical drawing. In 1923, with the opening of the High School on Highland Avenue next to the Emery Grover Building, domestic science and manual training were offered; and for the first time physical education was officially part of the curriculum. In 1930 another new building, the present one, allowed the addition of such subjects as biology. Since then, many new courses, such as Russian and calculus, have been added to the curriculum; and the program of accelerated and advanced placement courses has been established.

1935 Girl's Tennis Team

Although physical education did not become part of the curriculum until 1923, athletics had been part of school life for many years.

In 1882 the famous Needham-Wellesley rivalry, the oldest in the country between public schools, was started. A Wellesley student interested fellow students in contributing money toward the purchase of a football which at that time cost $3.00. The principal of Wellesley High School, Mr. Fred Boston, invited the boys of Needham High School to the first game. The game was held at a field near the Morton House in Wellesley, which the Needham students reached by bicycle. Wellesley won that first game; but of the first nine games Needham won four, Wellesley won three, and they had two ties.

In 1888 no game was held, for Wellesley refused to play. Since few rigid rules existed at that time, Needham had a few Harvard halfbacks and one father on their team. Spectator participation also apparently had not been ruled against; and when the game became exciting, spectators from both sides were known to jump eagerly into the fight.

Since then, however, teams have been set up more fairly; and the rivalry has continued with the teams playing alternately at Wellesley and at Needham on Thanksgiving Day.

In 1923 physical education was made part of the curriculum, and extra-curricular sports became more organized. In 1929 Mr. Claxton started wrestling as a winter sport so that the boys could keep active even when the ice was not hard enough for hockey. In the 1930's and 1940's basketball, baseball, track, and gymnastics followed as well as such girls' sports as field hockey, basketball, and softball.

Needham's teams have worked hard in recent years and have achieved records to be proud of, particularly last year in winning the Bay State League All Sports Trophy.

Advertisements from the first Advocate, 1891.

Despite the small size and instability of the high school in its early years, the school held a series of exhibitions. These exhibitions consisted of French dialogues, essays, and tableaux, performed by the students. From the sale of the tickets of the second one, the students made enough money to buy a cabinet organ for the school.

During the 1880's each year a member of the senior class would record the height, weight, and various personality traits of all the members of the class. This record could be considered the fore-runner of today's yearbook write-ups. The Advocate was first published in 1891, but it was similar to a magazine and contained essays, articles and advertisements, with drawings rather than photographs. This Advocate would be similar to a combination of the student literary publication, Even a Rag Like This, and today's Advocate. In later years two Advocates were published: one at Christmas with Christmas essays and photographs of fall sports, and one in June with winter and spring sports, essays, and a section for the seniors. In the 1940's the publication of a Christmas Advocate was stopped and now the Advocate is published as a single yearbook.

The first student to complete the four year course at Needham High School and become a graduate was Miss Caroline Gay. She did not receive a diploma, however; in 1871 Miss Annie Moseley and Miss Emma Hatch were the first students to graduate and be awarded diplomas. In 1875 Frederick H. Dewing "of an old, respected Needham family" was the first boy to finish the four year course and receive a diploma. The next year, however, even more progress was made; for six students, five girls and one boy, were awarded diplomas. For the first time graduation exercises were held, and these took place in the Baptist Church. After graduation many of these high school students, such as Miss Gay, became teachers in the elementary grades.

When the school finally settled in the Kimball Building, it began to graduate students more regularly. The number grew steadily, although in 1907 a class much larger than those before or immediately after it graduated. Now the number of graduates exceeds four hundred.

PROPOSED ENLARGEMENT OF NEEDHAM HIGH SCHOOL

MARCH 1965

Plans for the addition to Needham High School, approved by the Town Meeting in March, 1965.

The Advocate staff gratefully acknowledges the help given by the following people in preparing this section:

Mr. T. J. Crossman
Mr. Fred Jones
Mr. Sydney Stewart
Mr. Phillip Claxton
Mr. Henry Hicks
Paul Chalue
The Norfolk County Trust Co.
Mr. Kenneth Webb
Dr. Walter G. Patterson
The Town Engineering Dept.
Mr. Lee Allen

For the future of the school: May its members each year increase in number and in earnest devotion to its duties. May its graduates reflect credit on the school, and always be a power for good in the community. May they realize that every advantage enjoyed brings a corresponding responsibility, and so may their school training make them better members of the home, better citizens and better children of the Heavenly Father.

Advocate, 1891

In Tribute to John W. Ferrett

For the students now at Needham High School the death of John Ferrett was not the loss of a great man we knew well, but rather the loss of a man we wanted to know. Yet even we, who never knew him personally, felt the greatness of his spirit. Mr. Donald Nickerson expressed this greatness in his eulogy to John Ferrett, delivered on September 15, 1964:

"John will live on at Needham High School, so long as greatness lives on. He gave to Needham a standard and we can all still hear his voice saying, 'Come, come, my little scholars, you must do better than that.' To all Needham he said, 'Come, come, there is a better way to live.' For like Socrates, he saw the point of life as not merely to live, but to live well . . .

"He fought for his standards and in the end he won. And he won because his students understood what he was striving for, and they knew what it meant. John once said to me, 'You know, I sometimes wonder what meaning the world would have without my students.' His genius, and genius he really had, was in his remarkable understanding of the young mind. No one we have ever known could so challenge us on the one hand and so love us on the other . . .

"His life's work, his teaching, has made many of us better than we otherwise would have been. Our legacy from John is in the great line from Emerson, 'That nothing at last is sacred but the integrity of our own minds.' John taught us this by the way he lived—his wonderful talk, his love for learning, his humor, his reading aloud, his house. These were all one . . .

"A great teacher opens a door on eternity, for he never knows where his influence ends. From a little school house in Maine to Norwich University, to Braintree, to Needham, who could measure what an eternity of influence John has had."

Room. You were C-124's
best friend!
Best of
luck in the future!
B.H.

J.B.
You're one of the best sense of humor of any girl I know. Nobody I know could have taken all the crap you've taken so good-naturedly. We've had many memories which I hope you'll remember. Best of luck from your humble
Admirer
Kevin

It's hard to believe that we've come all this way together. From elementary to seniors.
Best of everything to you
next year always,
Gail
C.H.

Shirley,
I now sympathize
with you about the way the boys have been treating you for the past three years. Still,
they're great
and I'm so glad you're a part of it. Love
you

IN MEMORIAM

The members of the Class of 1965 pause at the end of their High School days to reflect with sadness upon the untimely death of a classmate, Marsha Ellen Zides. Those who knew Marsha remember her desire to become a pediatric nurse, which was well evidenced by her quiet, understanding way with people and her volunteer work at the Jewish Memorial Hospital. In fitting tribute to Marsha, a set of books about nursing has been collected in the Needham High School Library in her name.

NEEDHAM

"Quality builds confidence"

The William Carter Company, nationally-known manufacturer of knit underwear and sleepwear for infants, children, men and women operates seven modern plants. Pictured above is the Company's Home Office in Needham Heights, Mass. The manufacturing plants are located in Springfield, Mass.; Barnesville, Thomaston and Forsyth, Georgia; Senatobia and Centreville, Mississippi. In January 1964, Singing Needles, Incorporated, Leola, Pa., became a wholly-owned subsidiary of The William Carter Company.

Carter's is celebrating its 100th Birthday this year. The firm still steadfastly adheres to the high ideals of its founder, William Carter, who said, "Quality builds confidence, quality endures, quality pays."

 An anonymous friend

1865·centennial year·1965

A message from the Editor and Assistant Editor.

The staff of this year's book chose not to formally dedicate the centennial year Advocate to any one person, but rather to consider it a tribute to Mr. Ferrett and his dedicated work for the students at Needham High. The pencil drawing of Mr. Ferrett on page nineteen was done several years ago by Mr. Enos, who sketched as Mr. Ferrett was talking with another English teacher in the conference room.

Several people whose help on this book we would like to acknowledge are: Miss Burke, our advisor, who devoted time, patience, and gave us many valuable suggestions; Mr. Enos, who although not an official advisor, spent many hours with us giving advice about color, design, and layout; Mr. Allen, who arranged all the finances of the book; Mr. Talbot, our photographer; and Mr. Farnham, our representative from Wm. J. Keller Inc., who was always available when advice on printing techniques was needed.

And now the year is over; the book is complete. It represents the hard work of many, and we sincerely hope it is a true reflection of the centennial year at Needham High.

Jane Greeley, Editor and Ginny Washburn, Assistant Editor
